Art Unit: 1625

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-11 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Takashi, cited by applicants, in view of Perry Chemical Engineers' Handbook. The former discloses the identical distillation process for purifying epsilon-caprolactone prepared by the oxidation of cyclohexanone except that the removal of cyclohexanone from other lower boiling constituents of the first distillate which is lower boiling than the caprolactone is done in a second distillation. In the instant case the cyclohexanone is taken as a side-cut fraction from an intermediate tray of the first distillation column. If it could be shown that this is a common expedient in separatory fractional distillations then one of ordinary skill in the art would have been motivated to perform the instant process because 1 distillation step takes the place of 2. One of the advantages would be use of less energy and less equipment. Perry discloses at p. 13-38 that in petroleum distillation a number of side-stream products are withdrawn as well as overhead and bottoms. Thus it would have been obvious to separate cyclohexanone for recycle from some of the more volatile less valuable constituents of the reaction mixture as a side-cut fraction from an intermediate tray of the first distillation column.

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Art Unit: 1625

Claim 1 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention. Applicants' recited purpose in claim1 is a process for producing epsilon-caprolactone. However the claim only recites oxidation of cyclohexanone, followed by a step for recovering unreacted cyclohexanone. Further step(s) for the recovery of epsilon-caprolactone should be recited.
